Welcome to my Home

An unusual tour around the streets of Oxford.

Daniel Williams leads a group of tourists through the streets of Oxford. He stops outside a large building and explains, "This is one of the oldest museums in the world and I've heard it has a great art collection, but I've never been inside." Moments later he points down a side street and says, "I slept in that old garage for sixth months in 2012." This is no ordinary tour. Daniel is homeless and gives people an extraordinary introduction to the streets of Oxford. Daniel's tour goes all around the city. He stops at the best views and points out important buildings. He knows a surprising amount about famous places such as the Bodleian Library and notices many small details of the architecture of the historic buildings. At the same time, he explains what it is like living as a homeless person. He points out the hostels for the homeless, the day centres and other places where you can get cheap or free food. Daniel has been homeless for twelve years now. "I used to be a builder," says Daniel, "but my troubles began when I lost my job. My unemployment soon brought other problems, and then I split up with my wife and ended up without a home." After many years of only just surviving, things started to improve when he met John from Street Aware, a charity helping homeless people. John helped Daniel to start making changes to his life. John was impressed by Daniel's personality and his knowledge of the area, so he asked Daniel to become a guide under a new arrangement set up by Street Aware. Now Daniel is earning money from his daily tours, he is feeling more confident and he is hopeful for the future. He is no longer sleeping outside as he has a bed in a hostel. He says that he is making plans to move into permanent accommodation. He is grateful for his opportunity, and one day he hopes to give something back to Street Aware.
